WOMEN’S DAY CELEBRATIONS

International women’s day is globally celebrated and this does not exclude FARUG LBQ womxn just because of the diverse sexuality and gender. In line with this year’s theme, we #choosetochallenge by showcasing a documentary on silence to resistance where the Coalition of African lesbians challenged homophobia at the African Commission, the journey of the coalition on being granted, and later painfully losing the NGO observer status. You can read a published copy of our women’s day statement on our website and the link attached <https://faruganda.org/wp-content/uploads/2021/03/WOMENS-DAY-STATEMENT.pdf>

REGENERATION CIRCLES

Regeneration Circles are meant to restore our safety, worth, connection and imagination individually and as a movement. Stories stay, lessons leave, and we reflect, connect, practice and change. That fire that fuels us should not burn us out. This is what members/beneficiaries manifest from the regeneration circles.

“In the beginning, people walked away from Feminist forums because of one’s sexuality or the fact that they didn’t know that LBQ womxn and Female sex workers were first women before sexual orientation or sex work. From a time when it was only one lesbian and one sex worker, our numbers have slowly increased as feminists since they started to embrace and involve us as women. There is a need for the inclusion of more LBQ women and FSWs in general women’s rights movement building and organizing2 because anything that affects any woman affects us too. find the full story on our Facebook page <https://www.facebook.com/KuchuTimes/photos/a.740306909358297/3863713280350962/>

CELEBRATING ZERO DISCRIMINATION DAY

On this zero-discrimination day, march 1st 2021 people joined Biggie in championing health and human rights for LGBTIQ communities in Uganda, her message is envisioned in the picture attached.

Ssenfuka Joanita Warry

"Leadership is different at different times; it depends on the people you are working with at any given time. I get excited to go to work every morning. The space where I work feels like a home away from home. We have built a good team and I am absolutely passionate about what I do. This inspires me and gives me strength."

Ssenfuka Joanita Warry is a human rights defender. She is the executive director of Freedom and Roam Uganda (FARUG), an organization that has been addressing discrimination against lesbian, bisexual, transgender and intersex people for close to two decades.

Warry also holds many other leadership positions, including her role as the chairperson of the LGBTI Catholic Club and as a board member of Sexual Minorities Uganda (SMUG), the largest network of LGBT organizations in the country. One of her most significant roles is as a committed activist on HIV and AIDS and related health issues affecting LBQ women, and creating opportunities for these women to be involved in national HIV planning and programming.

When asked about the impact that she has made, she says that it is difficult to separate her individual achievements from that of the organization she leads as well as that of the LGBTIQ community in Uganda. However, she reflects, "I have been involved in movement building, connecting different organizations to work together. That has led to the birth of many other organizations."

She is keen to highlight that there is still so much work to do, especially in reference to the rights of LBQ women, and is committed to breaking the cycle of victimization by educating more women about their rights.

"To celebrate this International Women's Day, I want to borrow a quote," she considers, "When women gather, good things happen."

"Finally," she thoughtfully concludes, "when I reflect on what has been happening during the COVID-19 pandemic, the majority of nurses and volunteers who have been feeding the underprivileged, are women. Collectively, women can change the world." This Zero Discrimination Day, March 1, join Warry in championing health and human rights for LGBTIQ communities in sub-Saharan Africa.
